LESSON 1: CHOOSING YOUR NICHE & PERSONA

Before you generate a single image, you need to decide who your AI model is. This is a business decision, not an aesthetic one. Your niche determines your audience, your content style, and ultimately your revenue potential. The biggest mistake beginners make is choosing a niche they personally like instead of one with proven market demand.

> CHOOSING YOUR NICHE — READ THIS FIRST
> Do not just pick a generic blonde girl — that space is completely oversaturated and you will not stand out. You need to choose a niche that is currently working and has demand. Look at what's trending, what audiences are engaging with, and build your persona around that.
> Exotic niches (vitiligo, heterochromia, and similar unique traits) are highly not recommended. Fanvue has been actively cracking down on these types of models. While you can technically sell them on other platforms for AI content, the reality is that generating NSFW content for these models is extremely difficult for no good reason — the tools just don't handle it well. Save yourself the headache and pick a niche that works with the current tools and platforms.

Research what is already working. Look at successful AI influencer pages on Instagram, Threads, and TikTok. Study what aesthetics get engagement, what niches have active audiences, and what styles people actually follow. You are building a product for a market, not creating art for yourself.

Key Persona Decisions

- Age range and look (18-25 is the standard sweet spot for engagement)
- Ethnicity and features — pick what resonates with your target audience
- Style and aesthetic (e.g., girl-next-door, alt, fitness, elegant, cute)
- Personality tone (shy, bold, playful, mysterious) — this shapes all captions
- Name — must sound real, be memorable, easy to search, and available across platforms

Proven Niche Categories

- Girl-next-door / College aesthetic — highest mass appeal, easiest to grow
- Fitness / Gym — strong engagement, clear content themes
- Alt / Goth — passionate niche audience, less competition
- Elegant / Luxury — attracts higher-spending audience
- Cute / Soft — strong on Threads and TikTok for discovery

Niche Selection Rules

- Pick a niche with proven demand — do not invent a new one
- Research what is working on subscription platforms and social media
- Your persona must feel like a real person, not a character or cartoon
- Avoid overly specific niches that limit content variety
- Avoid niches that require complex backgrounds or scenarios to generate
- The simpler the niche, the easier it is to maintain consistency

GOOD EXAMPLE:

Niche: Cute, approachable college-age girl with a soft aesthetic.
Name: Emma, Lily, Sofia — simple, real, memorable.
Why it works: Massive audience, easy to generate content, natural settings.

BAD EXAMPLE:

Niche: 'Cyberpunk alien princess from the future.'
Name: XxDarkAngelxX — unnatural, forgettable.
Why it fails: Tiny audience, hard to generate consistently, looks obviously AI.

Name Selection Checklist

- Sounds like a real person's name — not a brand or character
- Easy to spell and remember after seeing it once
- Available as a username on Instagram, TikTok, and Threads
- Not already used by a well-known creator or public figure
- Works with a last initial for username format (e.g., emma.laine, sofiam)

END SUMMARY

- Choose your niche based on market demand, not personal preference — girl-next-door and fitness niches have the highest proven demand
- Seedream 4.5 and Nano Banana 2 are your primary image generation tools — master both for different content types
- Your base model's face is your brand — generate 20-30 variations and select the strongest as your seed image
- Use the reference image method to maintain face consistency across all future generations
- Face swap is a backup correction tool when reference generation produces a drifted face on an otherwise good image
- Lock in face structure, body type, skin tone, and eye color from day one — only outfits, lighting, and settings should vary
- Build a library of 30-50 images sorted into categories before launching any account
